INDEX GUIDE

[See also the suggestions on How to Use, p. viii.]

The expanded array of synonyms in this new revision of ROGER'S INTERNATIONAL THESAURUS has been made easily accessible by an improved and simplified index.

The numbers after the index entries refer to specific paragraphs in the various categories of ideas into which the text is divided, and not to pages.

Thus the number 1035.13 after the entry Aaronic(al) refers to the thirteenth paragraph of category 1035, entitled The Ministry.

The first and last category numbers on each page appear at the top of that page of text so that the reader can flip quickly to the precise location of the desired synonyms. The index is provided with similar alphabetical headings.

When an index entry has more than one connotation, each usage and its location in the text are clearly specified by the indented words and phrases in lighter type.

Synonyms and related words for the noun abandon, for example, will be found in three places in the text: as "carelessness" in the second paragraph of category 532; as "unrestraint" in the second paragraph of category 760; and as "turpitude" in the sixth paragraph of category 979.

These identifications are not always definitions or synonyms of the main index entry. Under the entry accord on page 662, the identification "music" is given as the designation of the subject matter in paragraph 461.3; "harmony" was not used as the identification because it has nonmusical meanings which correspond to other identifications of accord — "concord" and "agreement."

Grammatical labels (nouns, verbs, adjs., etc.) have been used in the index only when it is necessary to prevent confusion about the part of speech. Thus the noun abandon is distinguished from the verb, but the adjectival form abandoned is not labeled.

So that the index would not be unwieldy, a considerable number of words and phrases in the text were not included. These omissions, which do not impair the efficiency of the index, are of three basic kinds:

Very few of the Word List entries have been indexed because they are, for the most part, common nouns which do not have synonyms. Access to these lists has been made easy by indexing the general terms under which they are classed. Thus, the specific items contained in the fourteen Word Lists appended to category 192, Receptacle, are found through the index entries for receptacle, basin, pot, pan, cup, etc.

Many words and phrases have been left out of the index because they could not reasonably be expected to serve as a starting place in the search for synonyms. The verbal phrase do an about-face, for instance, was left out in favor of the simpler verb form about-face, which appears in the same paragraph of text.

Finally, when the entries for several different forms of the same word repeat references to the same categories, the less familiar form is sometimes omitted. The noun abashment, for example, was excluded because it repeated the category references for the verb abash and the adjective abashed. The reader who needs synonyms for the noun abashment can find them through either the verb or the adjective entries and by looking among the nouns in the category to which he is referred. Each category in the text is uniformly arranged by part of speech: nouns, verbs, adjectives, adverbs, prepositions, conjunctions, interjections, and phrases, in that order.
